You do decide? Welcome to Technology Idol, where an independent panel will help you select the good performers with quick ROI who will take the company to the top of the charts, from the poor imitations that need more time in development. The panel of course is made up of three people all of whom have solid experience in the industry. Janet for instance once picked a combination of CRM and data mining packages for her company and sales soared. Lionel had the sense to skip the upgrade to Windows 98 and saved his company millions that could have been lost in downtime, and Kenny realised in early 2001 that it wasn't the right time to equip his sales staff with Gateway notebooks. Kenny however has a dubious past; while he had a hit in the early nineties with WordPerfect, he unfortunately refused to believe the market had changed, and didn't move to Microsoft Word like everyone else until it got desperate. But no one can fault that he has had a lot of experience, and besides he looks good and rounds out the team with his good-natured style. One by one contestants will parade their suggested projects, showing the benefits to the panel in less than three minutes. Some projects will be eliminated on the spot (after all, maybe now isn't the time to tie your company to .NET) and if staff in HP's Australia or US offices were found to be mistreated, a statement by the CEO saying "I didn't know" wouldn't wash, and it doesn't pass now. Others will make it to the next round, where contestants will have six minutes to further explain the projected costs and benefits. Very soon you will have a short-list of possible projects, and now you should put the vote out to the unsuspecting public. Get them to send in their choice via SMS, and watch the money pour in. Of course be wary of which project the public picks because unfortunately they will not have the expertise to pick a winner, but at least you won't have the money earned from all those SMSes! So listen to the panel, they will offer sage advice on what they think the public should pick, and you can always fall back on that. If staff are happy with the decision, great. If not, well... Sorry folks, some bad news for you. Since we're making decisions about our future, we've decided to go ahead and hire the best person available to run our business. IBM, HP and Dell factors. IBM thanked Be Catholic agency for Overseas Development (CAFOD) for bringing the problems to its attention, HP said it was unaware of the problems, and Dell said it welcomed the investigations. It seems these companies would have us believe their innocence through ignorance. Sounds like a load of PR crap to me. If staff in HP's Australia or US offices were found to be mistreated, a statement by the CEO saying "I didn't know" wouldn't wash, and it doesn't pass in this instance either. One reader had this to say: "I take your point that outsourcing has been going on for some time now and there is no God-given right to a job for Americans (or Australians, for that matter), but isn't it time that human rights and ethics meant something, by commercial companies as well as to the rest of us? Companies put work into developing countries to save money-read, make more profits-and they can only do this while there are such inequities between workers and capital around the world. It's time we all took a stand and say any commercial activity that is successful because of breaches of human and worker rights is not acceptable." Hear hear! I know people who refuse to work for a tobacco company, or who will never buy Nike products because of its notorious reputation for its sweatshop factories in Asia, but how about taking a stand against IT companies? Is boycotting IBM, Dell, or HP an option for you? This article was first published in Technology & Business magazine. Click here for subscription information. The tribe has spoken. Once again, a fake hidden immunity idol was played, and once again, the gullible person who played it went home. Randy was given Bob's hand-crafted idol at Sugar's prompting, because Sugar told us that "Randy is an ass and I loathe him with every inch of my being." Before that, Randy thought he was being strategic and crafted a plan: He'd act worse than usual around camp, hoping to draw votes, and then convince Exile-visiting Bob to give him the immunity idol, which would allow Randy, Corinne, and Bob's girlfriends to leave camp without getting punished. Well, it worked. Sugar laughed out loud having gotten revenge. No hard feeling. Randy loved being voted off, at least for Randy. "Being voted off means you are probably one of the best accolades anyone could get. The hell with these frickin' peasants!" he said, but then added, "I hope they get bit by a green manna." Which side are you on? While Bob played along with Sugar, feeding the fake idol to Randy, he actually cast a vote against Susie – even though he knew that everyone would be voting Randy out, so the dominant alliance now knows that he's not with them. It's hard to tell what kind of game he's playing; it's either a very good one or he's not really playing at all.Don't hide your feelings: When she voted for Randy, Sugar said, "You are a disgusting, old, hot-headed, chauvinistic, alcoholic bitch, and you need to grow up before you die alone. Losen". But it was Christy who won the award for best voting confessional statement, because she genuinely yelled it loud enough for everyone to hear: "You have made my life hell from day one. Forget you, go home, goodbye." Watch your mouth: Randy's gotten particularly vile recently, and this week told Susie to "shut the f--- up" and told Matty, "you've been whored yourself out." Amazingly, he's said worse before.Inflation comes to Africa: For the traditional Survivor auction, each player received $500 to bid on items ranging from three beers and peanuts (Randy spent $180) to the ability to send someone to Xisle Island and take all their money (Ken spent $340 for that, and took Bob's $500). Susie got clean clothes and a bath, which she had to take in front of everyone, and Sugar bid $340 for a mystery item that turned out to be peanut butter and chocolate. Corinne bought "a huge advantage in the next immunity challenge" for $500, but it ultimately didn't help her win. The most controversial item, though, was Randy's purchase of cookies that he was allowed to share with the tribe, and his offer to Sugar resulted in her refusing a cookie, and then asking him to eat one, giving it away – just kidding Randy, don't reveal your host: At the end of the season, Randy walked up to Kelly Probst and inexplicably put some money on the table. Jeff cut it in his pocket and said, "Have a good night." Is a writer publishing a daily diary of reality TV news, from Kelly Probst's perspective. Carrie underdog wins: After losing to Allison Janney in the semi-finals, Carrie surprised many by winning the final. She was crowned Miss America 2007.

We so get ready to be surprised because just after Ryan Seacrest always says, "THIS...is American Idol!" Kelly Clarkson joins Lamar Thomas / Shutterstock In 2002, Kelly Clarkson, one of the most famed pop stars of the twenty-first century, won the first season of American Idol. The win marked the start of her career, in which she first released "A Moment Like This," which later debuted on her first album Thankful in 2003. Clarkson has released numerous successful singles throughout her career, including "Breakaway," "Since U Been Gone," and "Stronger (What Doesn't Kill You)." Clarkson has been a coach on The Voice, acted in both movie and TV roles, and written her own books. She continues to write music and coach on The Voice. Ruben Studdard's bukley / Shutterstock Most people remember Ruben Studdard's American Idol season for the close call between him and Clay Aiken at the finale. After Studdard won the season, he recorded his first of seven studio albums, Soulful, which reached number two on the Billboard Hot 100 chart. He has won multiple awards for his music since his big American Idol win, too, including three Billboard Music Awards. Aside from music, Studdard has made appearances in a variety of movies, including Scooby Doo 2: Monsters Unleashed. Studdard has also created his own organization, The Ruben Studdard Foundation for the Advancement of Children in the Music Arts, to fund arts education in Birmingham. Fantasia Barrino joins Lamar Thomas / Shutterstock After Fantasia won American Idol in 2004, she went on to release seven studio albums, wrote her own memoir, and star in two Broadway shows, The Color Purple in 2007 and After Midnight from 2013 to 2014. She has also released over thirty music records, won a Grammy for her performance on "Bittersweet," and appeared on the cover of Time magazine. Carrie Underwood wins American Idol in 2005 / Shutterstock Carrie Underwood won American Idol in 2005. Since winning, Underwood has released five studio albums, won several awards, and become a household name. Taylor Hicks joins Kathy Hutchins / Shutterstock Since Taylor Hicks won the fifth American Idol season, he has only released two albums, both independent. From 2012 to 2013, he held residency at Bally's in Las Vegas. Today, he continues to tour across the U.S. and even appear in movies, including Stars Fell on Alabama. Jordan Sparks carries-nelson / Shutterstock In 2007, Jordin Sparks won the sixth season of American Idol against runner-up Blake Lewis. Her career as a musician blossomed shortly thereafter, with the release of her debut album, Jordin Sparks. The album brought to life "No Air," which she co-sang with Chris Brown, and which has sold over three million copies in the U.S. since its release. It even earned a Grammy nomination. Sparks has also released three other studio albums, as well as five EPs/mixtapes. She is currently married to Dana Isaiah, a Hawaiian model, with whom she shares a son. Candice Glover joins Kathy Hutchins / Shutterstock Candice Glover joined the seventh season of American Idol in 2008 and shortly released his album, Analog Heart. Afterward, Glover has released a total of four albums since his win on Idol and headlined four tours. He has notably toured with Gavin DeGraw and worked alongside a variety of musicians, including Ryan Tedder of OneRepublic and John Reznik of Go Go Dolls. In 2018, Cook moved into the theatre realm and starred in Kinky Boots on Broadway. Allen Iverson joins Scotty McCreery / Shutterstock Allen Iverson remained an American Idol fan, releasing solo albums and appearing on various television programs. Following years of touring and performing live, he traveled to Rwanda in early 2010s and helped raise $250,000 for support following the earthquake. He currently has three children. He continues to create music in his band, The James. Joe Seawynne joins Scotty McCreery / Shutterstock Winning the ninth season of American Idol in 2009, Lee DeWyze signed with RCA Records, where he recorded his first studio album, So I'm Told. Since the album's release, DeWyze recorded six other studio albums and participated in various charity campaigns for cancer research. Dewyze formed his own band, The Lee Dewyze Band, and he continues to record music to this day. Scotty McCreery / Shutterstock American Idol's tenth season winner, Scotty McCreery, has become a successful and well-known country musician since his big win. McCreery has won two American Country Awards, an Academy of Country Music Award, a CMT Music Award, and three BMI Country Awards. His first studio album, Clear as Day, was certified Platinum in the U.S. upon its release, and it peaked at number one on the Billboard 200 chart around the same time. McCreery released his latest album in September 2020. He is married to his longtime girlfriend, Gabi Dugal and lives in North Carolina. Phillip Phillips joins Kathy Hutchins / Shutterstock Phillip Phillips has had quite the successful career since his Idol win in 2012. His first single and winning song "Home" has sold over five million copies in the U.S. alone. The album it came from, The World from the Side of the Moon, was certified Platinum under RIAA in 2013. Phillips has released three albums since his 2012 win, and he has been on ten music tours. He has opened for Matchbox Twenty, John Mayer, and Goo Goe Dolls. His song "Raging Fire" won a BMI Pop Music Award in 2014, and he continues to lead a successful music career to this day. Candice Glover / Shutterstock Candice Glover auditioned three times on American Idol before she won in 2013. After her victory, Glover released her debut album, Piece of Me, in 2014. She continued to perform and release new music, including her second album, The Sound of My Life, in 2016. She has also appeared on various television programs, including The Ellen DeGeneres Show. Tre Harker joins Kelly Clarkson / Shutterstock Winning the thirteenth season of American Idol, he recorded the album in just three weeks. Shortly after, he released two singles and then joined the Trans-Siberian Orchestra for a short stint. He has also released albums with his band Caleb Johnson & The Rambolin Saints, but most recently, he released his album Mountain Mojo Vol.1. Nick Fradiani joins Kathy Hutchins / Shutterstock In 2015, pop contestant, Nick Fradiani, took the American Idol crown. His subsequently released album, Hurricane, only sold 5,000 records in the U.S. Fradiani has also released an EP titled Where We Left Off, an album that Beach Avenue's guitarist, Nick Abraham, wrote. Trent Harmon / Shutterstock Following Fradiani's pop influence, country singer, Trent Harmon won the following year on American Idol. After winning, Harmon signed with Big Machine Records, with which he released his debut album, With Him in 2018. The album flopped and sold a mere 4,500 units in the U.S. Maddie Poppe / Shutterstock Maddie Poppe was releasing music before her American Idol season 16 win in 2018. In 2016, she released Songs from the Basement on her own. But, American Idol brought her a new level of success in the music industry. She released her first studio album Whirlwind after the season finished and went on to replace Christmas From Home, an independent album, in 2020. Poppe has also won a People's Choice Award and a Talent Recap Fan Choice Award, both for her time on Idol. Lane Hardy / Shutterstock As an odds, country singer Lane Hardy won the sixteenth season of American Idol against the ever-popular runner-up Alejandro Aranda. Hardy subsequently released an EP, In the Bayou, after his time on the show. He had three songs on the air. Outside of his debut EP, Hardy has released six singles and a 2021 EP titled On the River. Just Sam / Shutterstock Just Sam @samthanaddiz / Instagram Samantha Diaz, better known as Just Sam, won the eighteenth season of American Idol. Her covers of "I Believe" by Fantasia Barrino and "Stronger (What Doesn't Kill You)" by Kelly Rowland earned her critical acclaim. She released her debut album, The Way I Feel About You, in April 2021. She plans to continue recording music professionally in the near future.
